Table of Contents: Testimony to the Royal Commission on Book Publishing

Ruth Bradley-St-Cyr

Abstract

This article contains a table of contents to the 4408 pages of official testimony from Ontario's Royal Commission on Book Publishing, which operated from 1971 to 1973 looking into questions about the business of publishing in Canada. The table of contents helps researchers discover who testified before the commission—whether as individuals or on behalf of their company or organization—and when they testified in order to be able to find the official transcript of their testimony and their accompanying brief in the archival files held at the Archives of Ontario (RG 18-164). The article begins with a short introduction to the commission and its work, followed by six excerpts from the testimony from Quill & Quire, Peter Martin, the McGraw-Hill Company of Canada, Campbell B. Hughes, Dr. Frances G. Halpenny, and Hugh MacLennan. The table of contents comprises the remaining two-thirds of the article.

Résumé

Cet article comprend une table des matières du rapport officiel de 4 408 pages de la Royal Commission on Book Publishing de l'Ontario, qui a été fondée afin d'étudier la situation de l'industrie du livre au Canada et dont les travaux se sont déroulés de 1971 à 1973. La table des matières aide les chercheurs à découvrir l'identité de ceux qui ont témoigné devant la Commission – que ce soit à titre de particuliers ou comme représentants de leur entreprise ou de leur organisation – ainsi que le moment de leurs témoignages pour être en mesure d'en retracer la transcription officielle et les mémoires d'accompagnement dans les dossiers archivistiques conservés par les Archives publiques de l'Ontario (RG 18-164). L'article présente d'abord une brève introduction décrivant la Commission et ses travaux, suivie de six extraits des témoignages suivants : Quill & Quire, Peter Martin, McGraw-Hill Company of Canada, Campbell B. Hughes, Dr. Frances G. Halpenny et Hugh MacLennan. Le deux tiers restant de l'article est consacré à la table des matières.

Introduction

Although the testimony officially recorded by Ontario's Royal Commission on Book Publishing (1971–1973) has languished seemingly unread in the Archives of Ontario since it was deposited there in 1973, its 4408 pages make fascinating reading for book historians. But such a task is quite daunting in the absence of a finding aid that might illuminate who testified, who they represented, when they testified, and what they talked about so that researchers could follow up on their subjects of choice, be they authors, librarians, publishers, booksellers, or students concerned about a lack of Canadian textbooks. This table of contents is not an index, so it cannot help with what was discussed, but it does at least cover the questions of “who” and “when.”

The bound books of testimony take up boxes 2–7 of the hundred boxes of files in fonds RG 18-164, which contains correspondence, research done by the commission, newspaper coverage, and many other treasures. Those called to testify were generally those who had sent in briefs in response to the call for public opinion on the matters before the commission, which included the following:

- (a) the publishing industry in Ontario and throughout Canada with respect to its position within the business community;
- (b) the functions of the publishing industry in terms of its contributions to the cultural life and education of the people of the Province of Ontario and Canada;
- (c) the economic, cultural, social or other consequences for the people of Ontario and of Canada of the substantial ownership or control of publishing firms by foreign or foreign-owned or foreign-controlled corporations or by non-Canadians.¹

The commissioners also had “the power of summoning any person and requiring him or her to give evidence on oath and to produce such documents and things as the Commissioners deem requisite to the full examination of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.”² This power they certainly did use regarding the matter of the Metro News Company of Toronto, owned by the Molasky family of St. Louis, Missouri, accused of strong-arming the surrounding newsstand distribution company owners into selling their businesses to him. While the regular testimony to the commission was generally collegial and polite, the Molasky testimony was done in a more courtroom-like fashion, with lawyers and objections and mysterious memory lapses on the part of some witnesses, including 22-year-old Mark Molasky, answering for the family business. Ultimately, the Molasky family was prevented from taking over the newsstand markets of Southern Ontario by the commission-sponsored emergency legislation (Bill 64)³ and was forced to sell off what they had already bought. Canadian-owned media company Maclean-Hunter bought out Metro News, the jewel of the Molaskys’ erstwhile Canadian empire.

The bound copies of the briefs upon which those who testified before the commission were queried are contained in Boxes 20, 21, and 22 of the fonds.⁴ Other boxes contain their original, unbound briefs plus other briefs, including those sent in confidentially. There are no accompanying briefs for the Metro News testimony (July 13, 14, 19, 20, 21, and 23, and December 10)—though there are other documents and correspondence—nor for that of the writers who presented as a group on 9 December 1971. The testimony of the writers, which would make a dandy Fringe Festival play, is transcribed in this volume starting on page 141 under the title “The Writers’ Union Meets the Royal Commission.” The Molasky/Metro News testimony might be adapted into an excellent courtroom drama/film noire script, but as it takes up almost 1000 pages of the 4408 pages of testimony, you’ll have to go to the lovely Archives of Ontario reading room to judge for yourself.

In order to give a flavour of the testimony, a few brief excerpts from that of Quill & Quire, Peter Martin, the McGraw-Hill Company of Canada, Campbell B. Hughes, Dr. Frances G. Halpenny, and ³ The commission issued several interim reports. The second (8 June 1971) and fourth (27 March 1972) dealt with the problems in the distribution of paperbacks and periodicals, with the second interim report resulting in Bill 64 on ownership issues in order to curb the predatory activities of Metro News.

Hugh MacLennan are provided here, followed by the table of contents itself. Quill & Quire is still the main periodical of Canadian book industry news, Peter Martin was one of the founders of the Association of Canadian Publishers, McGraw-Hill Canada was the purchaser of The Ryerson Press, Campbell Hughes should have been the head of The Ryerson Press after Lorne Pierce (in which case it probably never would have lost money and been sold, but that job always went to a United Church clergyman),⁵ Frances Halpenny was a pioneer of book studies in Canada, and Hugh MacLennan was the author of The Watch That Ends the Night, Two Solitudes, and many other novels, as well as a professor of English at McGill University in Montreal. The commissioners they are testifying to are Richard Rohmer (The Chairman), Mr. Dalton Camp, and Dr. Marsh Jeanneret.

Canada as a civilized nation, is quite the equivalent of any major power in the world but not in publishing. In publishing we are about three rungs down the ladder by any standards. The question is, what are we going to do about it? Presumably that is why you gentlemen are sitting there, is because something is going to be done about it. Even in our small way at Quill & Quire we are trying to do something about it.⁶ —Quill & Quire

Why the crisis in the industry? We are not able to charge in Canada what must be charged to receive a sufficient return on sales to enable us to do next year's books. Canadian book publishers are able to make only a very small profit in their operations even when they are operating with very great efficiency. I believe the reason for this is, the book prices in Canada are psychologically for all practical purposes established in New York. This is one of the conditions of our environment and I think it is the most serious and most severe problem we have to face and solve if we are going to have a book publishing industry in this country. I publish books for people like me. I wish there were more of them around.⁷ —Publisher Peter Martin

We are concerned and disturbed that nationalism, which we understand and share, in some corners has become chauvinism. Too often good corporate citizens and substantial contributions to knowledge and culture are being ignored because of ownership. We welcome the opportunity that is being provided by these hearings to set the record straight.⁸ —McGraw-Hill Canada

I submit that at the present time a Canadian book can be published, can make its way through the qualification screen to Circular 14, and make as much impression in the back of the publisher's pocket or in the educational world as a raindrop in a mud puddle, because it now joins a group of 1400 books. It is very hard to find new books among some of the old doggies that are on Circular 14. [...] One book I was personally involved in has been there for 17 years and by any measure that I can think of in the publishing world, with education moving at that the speed it is, a book 17 years old has either been passed by for the method [...] content or [...] format.⁹ —Campbell Hughes

DR. JEANNERET: [to Dr. Frances G. Halpenny] I thought your observations on the lack of formal university credit courses in book publishing were valuable, if only because they point up—you didn't develop this point, but I know it is very much in your mind, I am sure. They point up the importance of a complementary function of the university department of teaching which is research, and I presume you would agree that it would be by formalizing instruction on publishing at the university level that we would most likely be able to stimulate bona fide research in book publishing and then this research would be undertaken by the very people who gave the courses. We could certainly wish that more research could be done on this subject and, indeed, if this happened, probably the Commission would not take the form it does. In fact, we might not need a Commission at all. Would you comment on that?

MR. CAMP: One of the problems, of course, is that it [is] a notoriously low-paying industry and does not, or is not as attractive as something else. One gets the impression, for example, that sales and the promotional side is more attractive than the editorial side.

DR. HALPENNY: [...] I think that if we are to have a lively industry and one which is really serving the purposes of this country, we must have the editors who know their job and who are respected by authors[;] who are seen to be engaged in an essential partnership. [...] the characteristic of a good editor is some kind of reasonably broad education, an intense curiosity which they develop as they go on. They have to have a great ability to jump into a lot of subjects suddenly and acquire a sort of feel for them if they are going to talk to authors intelligently.

MR. CAMP: And also some psychiatric work.

DR. HALPENNY: That is very true.

MR. CAMP: [...] if we do establish such a course, it would be necessary to supply materials for it.

DR. HALPENNY: I asked once [that] all the briefs should be deposited in the library for the course I teach. They would certainly be studied.

MR. CAMP: By the time we are through, there won't be much left out.¹⁰

PROFESSOR MACLENNAN: I am only speaking for myself but I have the most profound distrust in government sponsors for that reason that it is obvious in the nature that they will spend more money than private corporations because they have more to spend and waste more. Nevertheless, if you have a good man in government you can get something done. I don't think this committee was made fully aware of what the position was in Canada 25 years ago.

If I was to tell you that 68,000 hardback covers of my novel earned $4,500 and 110,000 copies of Barometer Rising, most of it paperback, made $675, I was taxed on this because it was regarded as taxable as royalty like all royalties.

We had a man, who is now gone, whose name was Eaton, but he decided that writing was a profession and, therefore, we were able to get decent kinds of contracts. We had to fight like hell to get a separate Canadian contract. I was the guinea pig in both of those cases. The late Reverend Graham and my late first wife got up a contract that our Canadian publishers with the exception of Mr. John Gray [Macmillan Company of Canada] at that time, all at that time, all except for Ryerson, threatened to blackball any Canadian writer if they demanded a separate Canadian contract, by God! This is what we have been up against. I am a pure individual and I don't think anything is as expensive as living but, on the other hand, where the hell else do you go? I mean to get the work out. [...] I get letters from librarians, telling me, college librarians are afraid to speak out because—for any Canadian textbooks—because they might lose their job, because some huge American textbook firms, and as long as we have got American professors in there—

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you have any record of those letters?

PROFESSOR MACLENNAN: I can't give you that but I cross my heart and hope to die.

THE CHAIRMAN: You have got a large heart, obviously.

PROFESSOR MACLENNAN: No.

THE CHAIRMAN: This is the kind of thing we are interested in.

PROFESSOR MACLENNAN: We all know these are the realities. If anybody speaks up in this country, by God, he is supposed to be a traitor to Canada!

DR. JEANNERET: I know we are running out of time but I just wanted to ask one question that has been provoked here to get something on the record. You are talking about the period for soft loans and you think they should be available on the same terms to non-profit publishers, provided any profits are ploughed back into the business and not used to subsidize other activities as may be the case with universities or ecclesiastical publishers.

As far as university publishers are concerned, of course, they normally try to plough back everything and more into the publishing, but if you are referring to the fact that at the University of Toronto, the scholarly publishing arm is required to generate all its funds from its publishing and related operations without assistance, direct or indirect, and also to subsidize to a substantial degree textbook distribution service on the campus at a discount to students for political reasons, then I am happy to put on the record that I agree with you.¹¹
